Relationship between serum levels of interleukin-1beta, tumor necrosis factor-alpha, and caspase-1 activity in patients with coronary artery disease. Coronary artery disease (CAD) is a complex, multifactorial disease, and inflammation and apoptosis are important elements in its pathogenesis. Interleukin-1beta (IL-1beta) and tumor necrosis factor-alpha (TNF-alpha) are proinflammatory cytokines involved in many physiologic processes and have been implicated in the pathogenesis of CAD. We investigated the relationship of the activity of caspase-1, IL-1beta, and TNF-alpha in patients with CAD. We evaluated the activity of caspase-1 in serum of patients with CAD (n = 80) and healthy individuals (n = 60) by using a colorimetric method and IL-1beta and TNF-alpha levels in serum of patients and healthy individuals by using ELISA method. Caspase-1 activity was higher in the serum of patients with CAD compared with healthy individuals (1.56 +/- 0.12 vs.
