War has come to Earth. The Cold War is raging. Superweapons have been built. The planet is at the brink of World War. All Earth knows is that a Disgruntled Extraterrestrial Race is threatening the destruction of Earth. A young Keter, John Whynn, has just been drafted into the Armed Forces to be a part of an elite Keter Unit. Now, John is at the top of his game. A stone cold killer. But still just a child in heart. In the dark and deadly world of the Keter, John is about to step into a battle he has never seen before, step into a war that is harder than any of them could ever imagine. Will the world burn?

Expert group on climate change says Australia will have to start using less carbon-intensive fossil fuels such as coal and rely more on natural gas by 2050 to reduce annual emissions, and stick to reducing total emissions rather than achieving zero emissions by 2050. The report, commissioned by the Future Energy Scenarios Network (FENS), was commissioned by the Climate Council and released to coincide with their annual Future of Australia's Energy Conference in Canberra this morning. It says Australia will have to reduce its current annual carbon emissions by about a third - from about 250 megatonnes of CO<sub>2</sub>-e per year to about 180 megatonnes - to address global temperature rise. The country will also need to invest in a further $100 billion a year in new renewable generation and storage. It says Australia can reduce its emissions from the electricity sector by 30% by 2030, and could reduce its emissions by as much as 75% by 2050. But Australian households are not required to reduce their emissions. The FENS report says gas is a low-cost, low-emission fuel that can provide renewable heat and electricity as well as transport fuel, and because it is burning in Australia it will not contribute to global warming. "Hydro-electricity and gas are both low-emission fuels and could be a substitute for coal and have a positive impact on our climate change," the report says. "Australia needs a

"Killer Meros" is a story about uncovering the meaning of death and finding yourself along the way. You are an unfortunate victim to his experiments. You were kidnapped, your memories were erased, and any trace of your existence was erased from the minds of your friends and family as you were murdered by him. Can you undo what was done to you and get revenge? Obscure Doubt is a story about uncovering the meaning of death and finding yourself along the way. You are a character that had died and entered a new world where your friends and family are now living in a dystopian world where society is ruled by a false belief in the hereafter. Your ability to execute a plan of your own has died with you; however, you will have to unravel the mystery of your death to get back the life you lost and live your life again. You will need to fight through the intrusive members of the society that have been given orders to watch over you as you fight for your freedom. If you do not surrender to the "Creator", then there is a chance that you will be forced to live in the afterlife where a cleverly corrupt world awaits you. Feeling brave? Try your hand at competitive battle for a chance to earn the title of "Ultimate Killer". Obscure Doubt features: 1. A uniquely connected story, full of emotion and twists 2. Get your own character view by playing as a specific character 3. Play in amazing environments: walk in the scenery around you, enjoy the beautiful background art, check out the details in the environment and enjoy all the charm! 4. World of exploration; customize your play style by choosing how to play and where to play. 5. In-depth storyline; explore the world of diehard perverts and get lost in crazy fun 6. Fully voiced characters; all character voices are recorded by professional actors 7. and Starwhale end up in a battle with a firey and powerful whaler named Black Unicorn for conquering 3e universes and Starwhale as just observed ( "Starwars GQ is a Galaxies Quest for collecting all the characters available in Star Wars (films & comics) source games, novels, cartoons, and entertainment products. This challenge and hide-and-seeK game is composed of unique planets and an independent galaxy [guests bar, races, and governments]. However, people are to follow the law of the space traveler: stay or move, but don't kill each other," That question is one of numerous topics they are in charge of covering in their 3e RPG ( ) A small but important (and not in a PQA sense!) detail made my week: Entering shipwrecks at night may need torches Finding a door in the dark is easy (you know where you left the door!), but if it's a lightless hatch you may not be able to find it. A shipwreck at night with no light may make a perfect, risky hide and seek for your ship. You will have to use all your wits and muscle power to make sure you identify that hatch when the rust calms down. Arrogant! It would be great to use torches in the spacecraft halls, but I did not find one in the code of my ROM (is it in a forum somewhere? Maybe on a website?), so I cannot answer what that might be. I only know that I never tested that. ~~ So make use of the stars and open the hatch before anyone finds you. I think that's about it... after playing the game for the first time, I am not spending my free time hanging around the flight computer to know what planets are colonized. I have such a complex feeling of oppression just thinking about all you guys to come back to Old School 2.0. Ah! And even though I may or may not focus on the latest big RPG news for a period of several weeks, I will always remember how enjoyable the making was. I really enjoyed the opening image we see this morning: Isn't it beautiful? ~~ I tried to envision it as "the first impressions

you have a crusty winter home, you might want to get that place on the top of the North Pole that you can access by plane—and by reindeer. Researchers at the University of Alaska Fairbanks have a breakthrough in the pursuit of that dream. They've developed a method to produce perfectly reproducible ice crystals on a surface, potentially an enormous improvement on current technology. The technology, which is publicly available, is also a blow to assumptions made about the survival of polar bears, which are at risk from declining ice, says study co-author Eric Steig. "For the first time, we actually have a technique that can produce consistent, perfect ice crystals on a surface, a flat surface," he says. The breakthrough comes from Steig's studies of mountains and glaciers in the Arctic. Snowfall spreads across the landscape and when it melts or is frozen in thin ice, the ice crystals it produces are known to have random patterns in their structure. Those random patterns can be caused by different conditions across the landscape at different times of the year. The approach used to produce perfect ice crystals is a version of a technique known as molecular dynamic simulation. It simulates the molecular structure and interactions of a material using a computer algorithm. "For the first time, we actually have a technique that can produce consistent, perfect ice crystals on a surface, a flat surface" In the case of ice, the computer code takes information about the physical properties of ice and runs it through the algorithm, producing the 3D structure of the ice crystal. This produced 3D structure can be then rapidly frozen, Steig says. "The beauty of our method is that any information can be used to
