Flippy is a unique title for devices running Android 4.3 and up. It's like flipping pancakes, except they're a lot thicker and much more difficult to flip over. Flippy requires two players of opposite genders and a minimum of two toppings. It's as easy as tapping your opponent's flippable pancakes, but things can get tricky when they're flipping out of control. The power-ups you earn from your Flips will help you make easy, easy flips that will win you the game before your opponent has time to make a single move. * In Flippy mode your entire screen is a game board. You can flip pancakes with your friend, or against a single opponent. * Gaining control of more than one pancake at a time or earning power-ups earn you extra moves in a round. * You will always be competing with yourself in a Flippy game, so get your opponent's moves in order.

(Don't hog that last piece of Bacon!) * There are three game modes in Flippy: Battle, Classic and a co-op mode for the brave and daring. * The game keeps track of high scores, so there's no need to fuss with a clock. * A realistic physics engine enables you to see pancake flips in slow motion and you can stop them at any time! * There are a few different skins

Z85 Gold COD: Black Ops Gold Multiplayer Map - Sugar Mine

The IGO closed out the year on a high note for me as my own work contributed a special holiday gift to fans: Sugar Mine, the second new map for COD: Black Ops gold. This map is more than just the holiday treat, however, as Sugar Mine is most fittingly the sequel to Sugar Rush, featuring the same refined, snowy, post-apocalyptic setting as well as the same vertical lines and relatively large number of windows used in that and Call of Duty: Black Ops game. Running in place of the level's deep snow is a mud slurry, which allows for many new set-pieces that I am rather proud of, as fans will see when Sugar Mine is revealed. I also have more surprises up my sleeve when it comes to the gravity of this map and the secret that is revealed during a significant point in the level. However, at this juncture in time, I can safely say that this map is reasonably well-balanced, great in single player, fantastic in co-op, and beautiful in competitive multiplayer. Sugar Mine's strengths and best play-throughs will soon enough come to light, but until then, check out my initial Sugar Mine reaction video and transcript. Playing For the first play-through, I played Sugar Mine on various IGO bumpers: an Original Xbox, PS2, Dreamcast, and Gamecube. Switching didn't really break anything on my end, and I was very impressed with the visuals and keeping things mobile across such a range of consoles. The optimization was good as well, with smoother gameplay and no host of inertia issues. The beauty that is Sugar Mine is evident across all game designs, but is particularly strong in the team environment. Walking around the core of Sugar Mine, you can see the sleek, clean, and sturdy exteriors of its many public spaces. Oh, and did I mention it is beautiful? The metal surfaces make it appear as if the Skid Row of Alaska has caught fire and that is only half of the detail behind the aesthetics. The second play-through was similar, but took place through night on the Xbox, and I was actually quite impressed by the soft, muted, and washed-out variants of the sunlight. It's not as clean as black but it gives the map's post-apocalyptic aesthetics a subtle flair and believability. The areas

The bodies of two women missing since Wednesday were found inside the smashed-up metal grid that was erected to prevent macaque attacks on tourists along the Li River in Sichuan's Wolong Nature Reserve, locals said. Ma Wenya, 20, and her sister, 18, Wang Baoqiao, were reported missing after they failed to return home from a hike in the reserve in north-western China on Wednesday. A picture taken on October 31, 2017 shows a lake in Wolong Nature Reserve, on the edge of Langmusi county in Sichuan province, China. (Photo: Xiong Han) According to a source surnamed Lian, the couple had been to the nature reserve to photograph macaques. After returning home, they found the metal mesh - measuring 12 meters by 1.5 meters - around their home "and had not discovered it before they went on their hike," the source said. Police have launched an investigation to identify the deceased women. A plaque erected to warn tourists about monkey attacks in Wolong Nature Reserve. (Photo: CRI) The two women are believed to have been abducted by members of the People's Armed Police, a paramilitary force tasked with upholding the country's laws, the source added. The killing comes just months after a large number of wealthy tourists were kidnapped by a gang in Sichuan province in March. Those kidnapped were released unharmed following a payment of US$185,000. Nine people were initially arrested on suspicion of involvement in the abduction, and four of the accused were sentenced to four to nine years in prison.
