Central retinal vein occlusion as a paraneoplastic syndrome in a patient with multiple myeloma. A 68-year-old woman with multiple myeloma developed a central retinal vein occlusion and went on to develop optic disc swelling that was diagnosed as a paraneoplastic syndrome. We present a report of the development of central retinal vein occlusion in a patient with multiple myeloma and review the literature on central retinal vein occlusion. The literature was found by computerized searches of MEDLINE, MEDLINE In-Process & Other Non-Indexed Citations, Current Contents, and book chapters to identify all articles published between 1966 and 2007 using the key words "central retinal vein occlusion" and "multiple myeloma". Four patients with central retinal vein occlusion and multiple myeloma have been described in the literature. It is likely that central retinal vein occlusion, which can lead to irreversible visual impairment, may be a paraneoplastic syndrome in patients with multiple myeloma.

Molecular phylogenetics and genetic divergence of three members of the family Aspergillaceae from decaying leaves associated with beach grass and beach pea. The three near-neighbour taxa Aspergillus niger, A. terreus and Penicillium chrysogenum are not readily distinguished morphologically. To better understand the genetic differences between these species, and to further elucidate how taxonomically relevant within the Aspergillus clade, we sequenced and analysed the ITS, BT2, caM and RPB2-specific intergenic spacer (IGS) regions. Using ITS and IGS sequences, A. terreus and P. chrysogenum were confirmed to represent two reciprocally monophyletic lineages. In the RPB2 phylogeny, A. niger was shown to be paraphyletic with respect to A. terreus and P. chrysogenum 6d1f23a050
